Blount Promises End to Zoning Discrimination

Favoritism in zoning will end if Willys Blount is elected as mayor, he promises. He is studying possibility of more stringent legislation to end zoning discrimination.
 Blount is critical that no standards are followed consistently in granting permits for rezoning and variances. Presently a person's property right are too often left to the whims of the City Council and Planning Commission, he charges.
 "I would favor a comprehensive study by a citizens' committee, preferably a group of men and women who have no axe to grind in real estate," Blount stated. "The duty of the committee would be to study the Torrance zoning laws and report to the council if there is any way of doing a good job for the city and at the same time avoid hurting a taxpayer who may desire to add a room or improve his property in some other manner."

 "I'm opposed to hedge-podge construction or development," Blount said, "but I would fight equally hard to prevent favoring one person over another in similar zoning problems."
